"It looks that way now," he continued 'Mr. Wanamaker's speech, as I interpret t, is a double warning. First, that the Republicans who are not Quay adherents may revolt and not support the State ticket next fall, and second, that if the Administration at Washington recognizes Senators Quay and Penrose in the dispensation of Federal patronage, to the exclusion of the Republicans who are not ma-chine men, those who are ignored will refuse to support any ticket Mr. Quay may nominate and either help the Democrats or run an independent ticket. In other words, Mr. Wanamaker has served notice

"Naturally the power the two Senators would have in controlling all of the Federal patronage would draw to them many politicians, but not the people. A CHANGE has been made this year in the election of delegates to the County. Christian Endeavor Convention which met at New Oxford, on the 25—27, of May. Formerly entertainment was provided for one delegate for every ten members, but now only two delegates are expected from each society. The reason for this is the fact that there are now 35 societies in the county and two delegates from each will make 70 persons to be provided and this number is considered as many as most congregations care to entertain.—East Berlin News.

On Wednesday evening feet. Herbert Alleman, of Gettysburg, delivered an address on "The Social Law of Service," and Kev. H. S. Jenanyan, of Tarsus, Asia Minor, on "Christian Endeavor Work in Armenia."

He has done his work well.

In many respects he was a man worthy of our admiration. He has been my friend, and has been the friend of all of us. That which is taught rather by the heart than by the brain, it is to treat all men with courtesy and kindness, to accord that intense devotion and fidelity to the interests which are placed within the charge of the haven to at proporties and decisionly the lawyer, to act promptly and decisively upon all questions submitted, and then not to think that all knowledge is contained within yourself. Mr. Kitzmiller was a most humble man, unpretentions in his knowledge, and he had the candor to admit his lack of knowledge and to seek it from those who he thought possessed it. This was one of his characteristics, his great humility.

I shall not take up the time of this meet.

I shall not take up the time of this meeting to dilate further upon his many merits. I trust that his faults may lay lightly upon him, that honor may be to his assiss and his honor may be to his assiss and that he may sleep in peace.

In rising to speak upon these resolutions 1 do so with considerable hesitation. It, will be remembered by the members of the Bar that almost from the day of my admission to the Bar 1 have been in Mr. Kitzmiller's office, coming there I think on the 23rd of January, 1889. From that day to this I baye been there and then admission to the Bar I have been in Mr. Kitzmiller's office, coming there I think on the 23rd of Jannary, 1889. From that day to this I have been there, and thus have seen Mr. Kitzmiller's character and der almost all circumstances, under the most pleasant circumstances. I have seen his character as manifested through his family relations. And from all this I can say that I have never known a character more generous, more honest or more honorable than that of our deceased bruther. He was a slave to the interests of his clients. He knew not what it was to delay any one's cause or deny his serious dead of Salver Ran, Md.; Hon. James L. Young and wife, of Salver Ran, Md.; Hon. James L. Young and wife, of Salver Ran, Md.; Hon. He was a model in many respects for our imitation. How thoroughly fathful to his clients; and with what transparent frankness he always met us, whether associated with him or against us. We could always depend upon Jacob Kitzmiller's word; it was not in the man to deceive. There was no mistaking what he meant when he spoke, or no mistaking what he fully real-zed his condition, and at once dropped his work and hasternation of the cyc on the part of the examination of the cyc on the part of the physician that Bright's discase had supplemented

"Congress first assembled in the new Capitol on November 17, 1800; and John Adams, then President, took up his abode in the Executive Mansion," writes ex-President Harrison of "The Domestic Side of the White House" in the May Ladies' Home Journal. "Neither the Capitol nor the Executive Mansion was fully completed. The proportions of the house seemed to Mrs. Adams as 'grand and superb.' The plan was taken from the palace of the Duke of Leinster is Dublin. 'It they will put me up some bells and let me have wood enough t keep fires.' wrote Mrs. Adams. 'I design to be pleased.' But, though literally in the woods, no one could be found to co and cart firewood. The few cords of wood that had been provided had been sylvania wagon, secured through a Treas Bry clerk, delivered a cord and a half of wood, 'which is,' wrote Mrs. Adams, 'all fires are constantly required, and we are told the roads will soon be so bad that it "The society ladies were 'impatient for
